The Different Treaties Arranged between Canadian Government and the Indians.

The different treaties arranged between the government of Canada and the Canadian Indians make interesting study.

Liberal Terms

In reading these treaties one cannot but admire the evident intention on the part of the government, as represented by the different treaty commissioners to deal generously, even bountifully, with the red men, who, in entering into the agreements made from time to time, relinquished any rights they may have had in the soil, thus opening a new world for settlement and cultivation by the people who have come from Britain and overcrowded Europe to find homes with us.

In his long report to the Governor-General on these treaties, Lieut.-Governor Morris pointed out that the provisions of the agreements must be carried out with the utmost good faith and with the sincerest intentions of the government. He emphasized the importance of a judicious selection of agents and farm instructors, with the additional aid of well selected carpenters and school teachers. He looked forward to seeing the Indians become faithful allies of the Crown and a gradually increasing and self-supporting people.

It was only to be expected that in the subsequent years the terms of the treaties would be a subject for frequent discussion between the Indians and the local officials appointed to administer and manage their affairs.

As the years passed by there were not a few who contended that many things promised by the treaty commissioners through official interpreters had not been given to them.

Nor was it a source of satisfaction to the Indian to be asked to produce his treaty parchment and compare the things promised on that with those he had actually received, because he thus found every promise faithfully performed.

There were among the Indians those who had been present at the treaty-making who claimed that the interpreters had referred to many things not mentioned in their parchment contracts. They did not hesitate to say that the interpreters had deliberately lied to them.

During the later 80's of these interpreters suffered from paralysis of his tongue from which he never recovered and this was quickly seized upon by the Indians as confirmation of their contention, considering his affliction as a punishment for his falsehoods.

In his conferences with his agents or other officials, there was perhaps nothing to which the Indian made more constant reference than to the alleged promise that he would receive payment for anything taken from his reserve by the white man, or for his use. This claim was recognized generally but at times led to amusing and often embarrassing circumstances.

A Costly Dinner

In the summer of 1886 Mr. R. H. Williams, now head of the Glasgow House of Regina, had a contract for the erection of an agency dwelling house at File Hills.

A contract for the painting of this structure had been given to the firm of Crapper Bros. The painters, all of whom were sent from Regina, brought with them all the necessary appliances for cooking their meals in the new building.

On a certain Monday morning, at the time set apart for the semi-weekly issue of rations to the Indians, it was observed that more than ordinary care had been bestowed by them in the preparation of their toilet, paint and feathers being in evidence on all sides.

To the initiated this meant a pow-wow with the agent. "Come on men and yet your rations," said the old Indian, called out Mr. Westover, their instructor. No heed was paid to this invitation. It was evident that other business was to be transacted first. After some inquiry by the interpreter, an old Indian named "Spirit Bird" approached the agent, Mr. P. J. Williams, and very ceremoniously shook hands with him.

After a long harangue he finally charged that while men were taking the Indian property, no payment. Urged for some definite information he laid the trouble that was at the heart of the previous day—Sunday—three turnips had been taken from his garden, and the painter's dinner.

"Get official advice," was the prompt decision, followed by a hasty return to the agent's office.

"Well?" said that official, interrogatively, evidently scenting trouble.

"Stern Child stopped my team and took off the neck yoke. What shall I do?"

"Knock Hell out of him," "All right sir, My sentiments exactly. I'll do that very thing."

Armed with the sulphur-fume authority, I returned to the scene of action only to find that my friend had disappeared, thus leaving the agent in a measure approved by the agent.

Five Sheep For Sale
 C. Robertson, commissioner of live stock for Saskatchewan, has recently purchased a valuable selection of sheep from the late Mr. J. O. Oxford, Shropshire and Leicester ewes and rams entered at the Canadian National Exhibition in November 2, and will be offered at the forthcoming annual sales of the Saskatchewan Sheep Breeders' Association. These sales will be held in Regina on November 9, and in Saskatoon on November 19.

A Liberal Parliament
 Following the rebellion of 1865 the opposition in the Dominion Parliament insisted that more progressive policy should be followed in dealing with the western Indian.

The result was that Parliament was asked for, and voted, millions of money for this purpose, during subsequent sessions.

In return for these lavish expenditures a departmental policy was inaugurated at Ottawa which aimed at offsetting in a measure, this heavy drain on public funds, by requiring the Indians to supply without charge, such quantities of hay and wood and other commodities as might be required at the agencies.

Protests, loud and lasting, were made by our File Hills wards. Again and again they emphasized the promise of payment said by the treaty commissioner.

In September, 1886, this question assumed a concrete form.

Calling the chiefs and headmen together, Agent Williams said to them:

"Since coming among you a year ago, you have not ceased to tell me about the great White Mother and what she has lately done for you. My friend, Little Bear, not long ago, pointing to the wagons, sleighs, mowers, plows, harrows and other things, told us all in a long address that he feared some great calamity would come upon you unless you would work and proper use of this machinery you showed your gratitude for the Queen's generosity."

"I have brought you here this morning to tell you of another way to express your thankfulness. During the coming winter and the following spring I will require several tons of hay for the government stock at the agency. Let every man, of you turn out. I will send with you my instructor, clerk and interpreter. With ten mowers and rakes you will in two or three days put up several hundred tons."

On the winter has passed you will be permitted to sell for your own benefit any surplus over my requirements. But you must very clearly understand that for my position you will get no payment. This must be a gift to your Queen.

The proposition was most vigorously opposed by every Indian present. Not until the sun was sinking in the west did the flow of native oratory show any tendency to terminate. Pie-pee-kee-see, Spook Blanket, the Owl, Stern Child, Buffalo Blanket, all insisted upon the usual cash equivalent, but in the end wiser counsel prevailed and a reluctant assent was given.

Next morning a long procession of wagons, mowers and rakes, preceded by carts loaded with provisions for two hundred men, women and children, headed for a hay meadow on Star Blanket's reserve, where thousands of tons stood waiting for the action of the mower knife.

The writer, mounted on a mowman, was the passenger. It was afterwards learned that during the night Star Blanket's men and a pow-wow were sent to withdraw their consent. They would lend no assistance. Whether they would show open resistance was uncertain.

As it turned out I was the only one to experience any unpleasantness. When about half a mile from the agency Stern Child suddenly emerged from a clump of bushes, crowing up his hands, and checked the progress of my team.

What to do was the problem which must be solved in a moment. "Get official advice," was the prompt decision, followed by a hasty return to the agent's office.

"Well?" said that official, interrogatively, evidently scenting trouble.

"Stern Child stopped my team and took off the neck yoke. What shall I do?"

"Knock Hell out of him," "All right sir, My sentiments exactly. I'll do that very thing."

Armed with the sulphur-fume authority, I returned to the scene of action only to find that my friend had disappeared, thus leaving the agent in a measure approved by the agent.

Making Wooden Keys For Prison
 Fred Jones, serving a sentence at the Port Arthur district jail for theft, was placed on trial recently on a charge of making wooden keys to assist other prisoners to escape.

Twelve Months For False Pretences
 Alex. Syniakko, formerly of Warsaw, but recently a resident of Winnipeg, where he is engaged in the elevator business, was sentenced by Judge Macdonald, to twelve months in jail for false pretences, in connection with the sale of a farm owned by A. Westcott of Calgary, Alberta, to Yorks Trach, a Warsaw farmer. Syniakko bought the land for $16 a acre, but represented that he had paid $19.75 an acre for it and had paid out $600 for the complete outfit, which he later sold.

Judge Macdonald in sentencing the accused said it was one of the most despicable crimes, in that an educated man should be guilty of such an illiterate forgery.

Canada Second in Use of Telephone
 An interesting comparison showing the popularity of the telephone in Canada has been made by officials of the Bell Telephone Company in connection with that company's application for increased rates.

The figure compiled show that Canada is second only to the United States in the matter of per capita use of the telephone. The Postmaster General of Great Britain, in a recent report, gave the figures for Great Britain as 10.6 per hundred people; Sweden 6.4; Norway (1917) 4.4; Germany (1914) 2.2; France 1.0; Italy (1917) 0.3.

 The old cinder Rainbow, for which, together with other sleds of the same make, were recently called, has been sold to Neider & Marcus of Seattle.

Questions and Answers

Question: Farmer, Ogema. What makes a bee hum?

Answer: The bee's humming is made by its wings when it flies. The noise is not made by its voice box, as when we sing, for the bee has no voice box. Its wings, however, move very quickly—a bird would "hum" when flying if its wings moved quickly enough.

If the waves in the air are too slow as when we wave a stick, or a bird flaps its wings, we hear nothing. If they are too fast, as in the case of some insects and in other cases, like the scream of the bat, we cannot hear them; thus there are many sounds which we cannot hear and many colors we cannot see. But the vibrations in the air made by the bee's wings are of a rate that is within the range of our hearing.

When a wave of air may break—and so we hear a humming.

Question: Why does a noise break a window?

Answer: A noise is an irregular wave of air—which is a real thing, and has weight and power, though not so loud. The noise is a window exactly as the wave in the sea will break a breakwater, though the wave can only do this when it is very strong. Every time a noise gets through a window it shakes the window.

If the noise is coming from the street the air outside is thrown into waves which pass through it until they strike the window and shake it. Then the window shakes the air inside the room in exactly the same way as the air outside shook it, only not so strongly. And so the noise reaches you just as if you had heard it outside, though not so loud. The noise only has to be loud enough to shake the window more than it can stand and then it breaks.

Question: Lover of Birds. How do birds know how to build their nests?

Answer: No one has ever yet been really able to explain by what power animals are able to do all the wonderful things of which they are capable, such as spiders making webs, bees storing honey, birds building nests, etc. It is by what we call instinct. Human beings have very little instinct; we have to learn for ourselves almost everything we do. We do not read or write instinctively, and we have to learn what to do by what we call instinct. Human beings have very little instinct; we have to learn for ourselves almost everything we do. We do not read or write instinctively, and we have to learn what to do by what we call instinct. Human beings have very little instinct; we have to learn for ourselves almost everything we do. We do not read or write instinctively, and we have to learn what to do by what we call instinct.

The instinct of animals, however, shown in the spider's web, bird's nest and many other things, is quite different. There is no that they have never seen any other animal do it. They have never learned it; they have never had to do a most difficult thing only once in their lives and after they have accomplished it they die; and it is known for certain learning at all. Many animals practised, and yet they can do it perfectly. This is the nature of instinct; its weakness is that it can only do what it is made, and here is where the power of intelligence is so much superior to that of instinct. No one knows from whence instinct comes.

Mexican Kisses

Put into a saucepan two cups of brown sugar and a half cup of milk, cook gently until a little dropped in cold water will ball it. It will take ten minutes or a little less to reach this stage. Stir constantly while boiling as it scorches easily. Add a heaping tablespoonful of butter, and as soon as melted remove from the fire and beat steadily until the mixture looks creamy and slightly granulated. Stir in at once a pound of English walnuts broken (not chopped) into bits. Beat hard and turn into buttered tins to harden.

The PERSONAL SIDE

PROMINENT WESTERN CHARACTERS—SOME INTERESTING ANECDOTES OF PEOPLE WE ALL KNOW.

JACK SYMONDS

There used to be an old time frontiersman around Fort McLeod called Jack Symonds. He had, we think, at one time, been in the North West Mounted Police, and afterwards followed the vocation of a cow puncher. He is said to have been a little bit under a cloud at the time of the South African war, but he came from some remote part of the range and joined up with Strathcona's Horse. He was a first class fighting man and soon became a sergeant. He was a story teller of parts, and on his return from the war had some interesting tales to relate. He foregathered with Mr. John Haykes, present provincial librarian of Saskatchewan in Calgary and told the following incident:

"A party of Strathcona's Horse was on patrol duty. They rode up to a Boer farm house, on which a white flag was displayed. As they were dismounting a volley was fired from the windows and the leader of the party fell from his horse, shot through the head. Symonds in his capacity of sergeant, took command of the party. A temporary retreat was ordered and then the Boer house was beset in the approved mounted infantry manner. It was eventually carried by assault without further casualties and seven Boers with arms in their hands were captured. According to Symonds' story he immediately proceeded to execute summary justice upon them for their breach of the amenities of civilized warfare. A stunted tree was found growing near by. Halter shanks were requisitioned and five Boers were already suspended from the limbs when a British patrol appeared on the scene to the immense relief of the veto Boers who were still waiting to be hanged.

"What the devil does this mean sergeant?" said the Imperial Officer as Symonds clicked his heels and came to the salute.

"Don't know sir," replied Symonds. "It appears to me like an extraordinary case of collective suicide."

Mr. Hawkes was greatly edified by this tale, and some years afterwards, having occasion to visit Fort McLeod, remembered Symonds, and asked about him. The man to whom he directed his question said:

"Why there he is riding down the street." It was an election day, or some other celebration, and Symonds was well ginned up. At that time Mr. Hawkes wore a little torped-shaped beard and sported a yachting cap which gave him a decidedly nautical appearance. There was a popular character of fiction figuring then in one of the best known magazines, under the name of Captain Kettle, and it must be confessed that Mr. Hawkes did not look unlike his picture.

He halted Jack Symonds and extended his hand. Symonds looked at him in amazement for a minute and then leaping from his horse exclaimed: "Well I'll be busted if it ain't old Cap' Kettle; put it there partner; you have sure come to the right shop for your talents when you came to Fort McLeod."

HON. FRANK OLIVER

The Hon. Frank Oliver, the veteran newspaper editor and politician of Edmonton, is reported to have a most wonderful profane gift. He travelled overland to Edmonton long before there were any railways in that country. His wife was with him and they travelled by means of an ox-cart. One day the equipment got stuck in a slough and Mr. Oliver called down the vengeance of heaven and of the nether regions upon the unfortunate oxen and cart and everything coming between them. Mr. Oliver, who had not been very long married at the time, listened with somewhat pained expression to her husband's emphatic remarks. She said nothing, however, and the travellers eventually succeeded in extricating themselves from the predicament. The next day an accident occurred and Mr. Oliver had actually opened his mouth to repeat his previous performance. In this he is said to have been anticipated by his better half, who marched forward and started to swear most vigorously. Her husband listened in astonishment and then dumb-founded asked her what she meant and where she acquired her vocabulary.

"Why from you," of course, she replied "and if you don't wish me to repeat it you will restrain yourself in my presence in future."

Mr. Oliver is said to have learned the lesson, although he is still able, when Mrs. Oliver is not by, to utter a succession of swear words together with fluency and coherence. The story may be true—and then again it may not. It will be current, however, among the old-timers of Edmonton.

LOYD GEORGE IN CANADA

It may not be generally known that Premier Lloyd George of Great Britain visited Western Canada some eighteen or twenty years ago. He was at that time a simple member of the House of Commons who had got himself into some unpopularity in England owing to his attitude in the Boer War. The occasion of his visit was an investigation of the scheme for the settlement of a number of Welsh families in Western Canada with it. Mrs. Oliver, who had not been very long married at the time, listened with somewhat pained expression to her husband's emphatic remarks. She said nothing, however, and the travellers eventually succeeded in extricating themselves from the predicament. The next day an accident occurred and Mr. Oliver had actually opened his mouth to repeat his previous performance. In this he is said to have been anticipated by his better half, who marched forward and started to swear most vigorously. Her husband listened in astonishment and then dumb-founded asked her what she meant and where she acquired her vocabulary.

He was at that time a prominent radical in his views, and down upon the aristocratic and Lords. In the course of one of his conversations Mr. Speers asked him if the people of England would not be somewhat at sea if they were deprived of the guidance of those whom they had so long regarded as their natural leaders.

"No," said Lloyd George. "I and others of their own class can lead them."

Then he was taken before the provincial police court for having liquor in a place other than "a private dwelling house" as forbidden under the Temperance Act, and he was fined $500 and costs for this. This trip is reputed to be Goldberg's first to Canada. The driver of the unlucky car was fined $10 on the charge of conveying liquor.

What Lloyd George Thinks of Life Insurance

"The willingness to take risks is, in the great merchant or capitalist, a virtue. It is to him what courage is to a soldier, or imagination to a poet. But the willingness to take risks is in the wage earner or the ordinary earner, a weakness, yea, even a vice. The contrary of the vice of gambling is the virtue of thrift, and the system of life insurance has given the thrifty man his opportunity."
